PRODUCT CATALOGUE

Welcome to our 2024 Southern Trident Product Catalogue

Growing as a responsible company as fast as plants grow in our compost.

Welcome again to the new Southern Trident Product Catalogue. A year ago I predicted an even better 2023 and that's what it's been.

We launched new carbon neutral Harmony Gardens growing media, the Ericaceous Compost was immediately recognised by the industry, winning Best Garden Care product at Four Oaks. As you flick through this catalogue, you'll see we're ready to launch even more over the coming months.

We've listened to our customers and have made a few small changes. We are revamping our compressed range by changing the packaging to allow them to be stored inside and out, we've added expanding bags to our Houseplant range to make it super easy for consumers to re-hydrate the coir, and we've even launched a new introductory product, a 3L All Purpose Compost to get consumers to try our product and see how good it really is.

None of this takes away from the rest of the range, Coco Burn our environmentally friendly BBQ Charcoal, why chop down trees when you can take the coconut shell and carbonise that to produce a superior quality charcoal. Our Garden Articles, hanging basket liners, coir pots, houseplant support and of course our huge range of coir doormats, catering for all tastes even giving consumers the chance to highlight their front doors at Christmas.

Internally as a young company we are continuing to improve our processes becoming both ISO 9001 and ISO 14001 accredited and we are working on SEDEX accreditation for our India supply base to give our customers the utmost confidence in everything we do.

We have found two new charities to support which forms an important part of our ethos, putting back where we can. We support HighGround, a military charity using horticulture to rehabilitate ex-servicemen and Perennial, a charity helping those who work in our industry who are struggling or fallen on hard times. We have additionally become a supporter of the YPHA encouraging young people in our fantastic industry.

Thank you for your continued and growing support in 2023, we don't take it for granted. We look forward to supplying you and all having an amazing 2024.

Kind regards

CARBON NEUTRAL

Last year we became carbon neutral and we continue to measure our footprint and look at how we can reduce it further. We continue to be PAS 2060 accredited and are adding to Harmony Gardens, the worlds only carbon neutral compost.

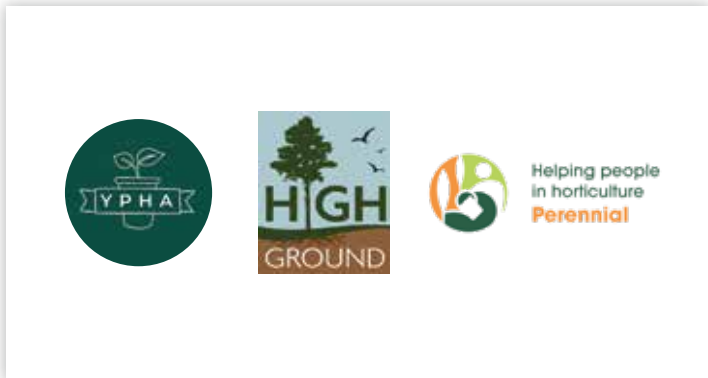

SOIL ASSOCIATION

We have also been working hard on achieving organic status for our coir. All coir produced by Southern Trident has Soil Association Approved accreditation. This means that our coir can be used for organic growing of our customers plants, flowers and vegetables and for those manufacturers that use our coir in their growing media the ability to get the same organic status.

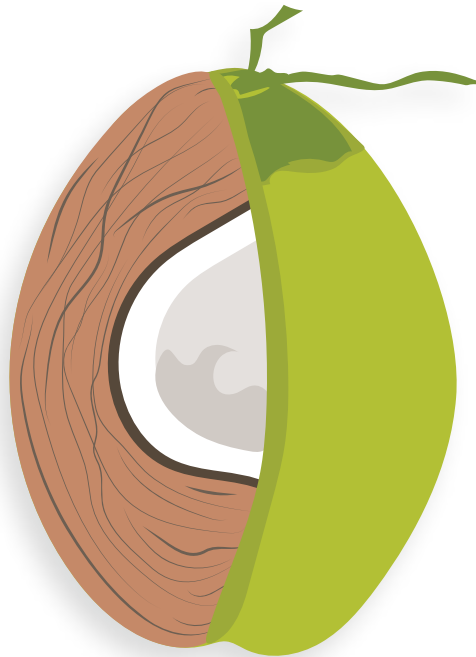

RESPONSIBLE SOURCING SCHEME FOR GROWING MEDIA

We are proud to become one of the inaugural members of this scheme, again demonstrating our desire to ensure our products are as environmentally responsible as possible. This means that we have measured seven key environmental impacts of our products so that we can ensure they are as low as possible.

What is the history of coir use in horticulture?

Coir is a by-product of the coconut production industries in countries such as Indonesia, India, the Philippines, Brazil, and Sri Lanka. The vast majority of coir pith used in growing media in the UK comes from India and Sri Lanka. As a by-product, it was previously a material that would go to waste, but it takes a long time to degrade naturally due to high lignin content. If left on the side of the road or in landfill it would remain for decades, adding to pollution of water bodies, or if burned adding to greenhouse gases. By using this material as an ingredient in growing media, this reduces the amount going to waste.

Why is coir used in horticulture?

Professional growing media in 2021 was just over 25% coir, with a total volume used of over 300,000 cubic metres. As an ingredient, coir has the capacity for storing water longer than other mediums, allows for greater aeration around plant roots, and can be delivered dried and compressed to take up less weight and space in transport. This means that a much greater mass of coir can be transported in the same volume as other materials such as wood, bark, or green compost. Coir is also important because as peat is phased out of production, there would likely be a shortage of alternative materials that can replace peat. This also needs to be done in a responsible way, to ensure coir used in horticulture is an environmentally and socially responsible material.

Where is UK coir sourced from?

Coir in the UK is sourced almost exclusively from India and Sri Lanka, from coconut plantations that have been established for decades, many of which are small holdings and family run. There is very little evidence of rainforest or other ecologically important land being destroyed specifically for coconut production. Cultivation areas of coconuts in India over the last 30 years has only increased by 550,000 hectares (an increase of 36%).

From 1991/92 total area of coconut production in India was 1,529,000 hectares, growing to 2,079,000 hectares in 2016/17. In addition, the yield of kg/Ha increased from 6593 to 7804 in the same time period. Rainforest and other ecologically important land is not destroyed or lost for coir production in India.

What does responsible coir look like?

While water is used to wash and clean the coir materials, good practice is increasing the use of rainwater harvesting and recycled water to reduce mains water use. New treatment plants can be built with recycled water and sustainable practices incorporated from inception.

Southern Trident ensure ethical labour practices and corporate social responsibility (CSR) by taking part in the Responsible Sourcing Scheme for Growing Media (RSSGM) and must meet social compliance standards and ethical labour requirements.

The RSSGM was developed by the Growing Media Association under the auspices of the Horticultural Trades Association and in collaboration with leading retailers, Defra and NGOs, and scores are calculated based on set criteria. This is the most objective measure so far of growing media ingredients and the higher the score, the more responsible and sustainable the material is.

What about transport?

Coir is shipped into the UK for use in growing media exclusively by shipping containers, with the vast majority (if not all shipments) on Dry Bulk Carriers. Compared to rail, road and air freight, shipping is much more efficient in terms of carbon intensity. Bulk Carriers have an average carbon intensity of 3.9g of CO₂/tonne/km, but can be as low as 2g of CO₂/tonne/km. In comparison, rail freight has an average carbon intensity of 48g CO₂/tonne/km, road freight has an average carbon intensity of 144g CO₂/tonne/km, and air freight has an average carbon intensity of 435g CO₂/tonne/km but air freight can range up to 1800g CO₂/tonne/km.
