Treatments

Even though all of our buildings are pressure treated as standard to protect from rotting, decay and fungus, we would advise giving all garden buildings an additional oil or spirit based treatment to offer water protection against the British elements.

As timber is naturally porous it is vital that this treatment is apply to prolong the life of your building.

We would also advise guttering to be put up alongside your garden building which will help help discard unwatered rainfall from penetrating the sides of your building.

Floor Protection

All of our buildings include pressure treated floor bearers which raise the building and prevent rainfall coming into contact with the flooring. As these are pressure treated it will again prevent the floor bearers from rotting, decay and fungus.

Important Information

Wood is a natural product and all trees are different with different properties. No one tree is exactly the same. These properties can include difference in colour, warping, twisting, splits, knots, knot holes and variances with product finishes. The development and appearance of these natural properties of timber are not defects with the product itself

Any sizes that we show are approximations and are in metric units. The characteristics of the timber will change over time due to environment conditions.

Sometimes deep and wide cracks can appear unsightly but we have considered for these issues in our design and they cannot be guaranteed against. These cracks do not in any way undermine our products of our structure. We supply many satisfied people with our products every year, while they understand the beauty of natural materials and the quality of our timber being higher than the standard used in the industry.

All buildings should be aired out regularly to prevent any condensation or mould accumulating inside the building. We do not take responsibility for problems arising from any work done on the building via third parties.

All customers/representatives are required to check the building and agree that all work carried out is of satisfactory standard. If there is no one available then it will be deemed that all work is satisfactory quality.

Any call out after may be chargeable.

Any base must be sufficiently hard for our installers to work upon. If you are laying a concrete base then we would suggest that it is given at least 7 days to harden before any installing and erecting of product starts. When our installers arrive on premises, they will check the level of the base and whether or not it is sufficient to work on. If we find the base is not correct in any way or uneven, then we will discuss the matter with you and ask for a disclaimer to be signed which allows us to commence our work (if possible) or charge yourself for a refit for another day (please see additional charges) Any problems that do arise from the base issues are the responsibility of the customer.
