FSC (Forest Stewardship Council)

FSC (Forest Stewardship Council) ensures that products come from well-managed forests that can offer environmental, social and economic benefits.

Products sold as FSC certified have their entire production chain verified. FSC Chain of Custody Certification is required as a way to guarantee that certified products are kept separate from non-certified products.

Overall, FSC certification is important, as it promotes sustainable forest management, protects biodiversity, addresses climate change, ensures social responsibility and provides transparency in the supply chain and thus is a differentiating factor from ground.

With the idea that certified companies can guarantee efficiency in both production and customer service, ISO 9001 certification was created.

Customers demand quality for their products, so they look for more than just a good price and are increasingly focused on product and service quality.

Finding examples of customers who question the reliability of a brand or company is not difficult. The requirements presented by ISO 9001 aim to improve the organization's processes in general, while strengthening the quality management system.

Everyone around the world recognizes and respects this standard. In other words, the quality stamp gives organisations that use it safety, trust and assured quality.
