The collection embodies warmth, comfort, and individuality, inviting wearers to experience the profound connection between the wearer and the heritage of handcrafted elegance. Embrace the essence of Nepal with this unique blend of artistry and nature.

Nepal's high-altitude regions, particularly Mustang and Dolpa, provide the ideal environment for the rare Chyangra goats, whose fine undercoat produces some of the world's most coveted cashmere. Living above 3,000 meters in these rugged Himalayan landscapes, the goats naturally develop an exceptionally soft, warm fiber to survive the extreme cold, giving Nepalese pashmina its unparalleled lightness and quality. The traditional herding communities of Mustang and Dolpa play a crucial role in sustaining both the Chyangra breed and the fragile mountain ecosystem, ensuring that this ancient craft continues to thrive while preserving the cultural and environmental heritage of the Himalayas.

These cashmere fibres are then carefully processed in spinning units, where they are transformed into yarn through traditional hand-spinning techniques. The naturally uneven yarn is set on hand-loom to create exquisite scarves, while sweaters are knitted on flat-bed, hand-operated machines, preserving the authentic craft at every stage. Each step—from sorting and spinning to weaving and knitting—is meticulously carried out by skilled artisans, resulting in unique, soulful pieces that carry the heritage of Nepal onto the global stage.

Message From The Owner

Cashmere manufacturing has a long and proud tradition in Nepal—one rooted in craftsmanship, patience, and the empowerment of women. For decades, underprivileged women have been trained in traditional techniques, mastering skills passed down through generations. Our father began this journey 45 years ago, at a time when every stage of production was done by hand. Raw cashmere fibres were carefully sourced, hand-spun, hand-woven, and finished with remarkable precision. Though the process was laborious, it resulted in uniquely beautiful scarves that carried the soul of true craftsmanship.

Nepalese cashmere gained global recognition when Queen Elizabeth adorned it at a public event, bringing international attention to its elegance and quality. Today, more than four decades later, the business continues under the second generation, with a deep respect for the same traditional hand-weaving and handcrafted techniques. While our collections have evolved to include knitwear, homeware etc., our commitment to authenticity, quality, and ethical production remains unchanged. We believe in creating cashmere that is gentle on human skin and kind to Mother Earth, and we hope our sincere efforts are felt and appreciated by consumers around the world.
