Serendipity: finding something good/beautiful without looking for it.

Fascinated as I have always been with the myriad forms, shapes and colours of the natural world, it has been a delight to discover a way in which I can combine this love of nature with my love of design and artistry, to produce a unique range of jewellery. Photography has also been a life-long passion with me and it has brought so much satisfaction to have developed a process that has allowed me to be able to transpose images on to aluminium, creating individual items that are both beautiful and easy to wear.

How Photofinish began

Although basically a very practical and logical person, I also have a very strong creative streak and this has been apparent in so many ways throughout my life. Growing up, I was always drawn to construction in one form or another and then at work my role for a number of years was to design and produce equipment to be used in conservation projects. Eventually the post became more project management based and I missed having a practical outlet for my creativity.

A change in circumstances in 2016 and serendipity led to a new venture in jewellery design, which was not something that I had previously considered. Seeing a range of aluminium jewellery on display caught my eye immediately and, over the next year, I developed a procedure that allows me to "print" my photographs onto aluminium, so creating jewellery with a unique finish and appearance.
