Introducing our Moissanite Carat Range.

Moissanite is a laboratory created stone (silicon carbide), more affordable than diamonds and yet more luxurious than cubic zirconia.

The stones we have used give an equivalent diamond carat size, not weight.

Moissanites are slightly more brilliant than diamonds – with a refractive index of 2.65 (diamonds 2.42) and with a higher dispersion they reflect more coloured sparkle or ‘fire’.

Moissanite is second only to diamonds on the Mohs hardness scale 9.25 (diamonds score 10), making moissanite a practical and durable alternative.

Moissanite in its natural form is very rare on earth and was originally discovered in a meteor crater by the French chemist Henri Moissan in 1893.

Our lab-grown moissanite is a great alternative to diamonds, and is more luxurious and durable when compared to cubic zirconia / cz.

With earrings the carat equivalent stated is per earring not per pair, so for example H6412/S 0.25 carat equivalent has a total carat equivalent of .50 for the pair.

Since moissanite is laboratory grown there is no mining necessary so it is an eco-friendly diamond alternative at a fraction of the cost.
