

CHIVE

We hope you enjoy this book. It's been a labour of love. Just like our Ceramic Flowers.

We've been doing this for over 20 years. We're located in Rotterdam and London. (Yes, we know we sound like an international diamond smuggling ring.)

You'll find us at the Maison&Objet. If you really want to leave civilization, you can also visit us at the Chelsea Flower Show, and Spring Fair in England.

We hope to see you soon.

CHIVE'S PRETTY LITTLE BOOK OF FLOWERS

A Short, Brief History of Ceramic Flora.

“One does not simply wake up one morning and decide to become a ceramic flower maker.”

Aubrey Cuthburton - Jones (1903 - 2017)

At the height of the Canadian Hurricane season during the winter of 2010, the artisans of Chive were fumbling with clay like toddlers with Play-Doh. Their early attempts resembled succulents – forgiving, blob-like plants. It was a mildly depressing existence, the ceramic equivalent of a cover band that only plays “Wonderwall”.

In desperation, the Chive artisans headed straight to the Black Forest in Germany, hunting down a glaze-master-turned-madman known simply as Hans. His beard contained several ecosystems and possibly small rodents. His hair, a tribute to German taste. His glazes, however, were magnificent.

By 2013, after months of painstaking craftsmanship, the porcelain posies made their debut at the Chelsea Flower Show in London. Chive had created a masterpiece. The crowds seemed to agree. The booth was packed with admirers. But then reality smacked Chive in the face like a Zuckerberg joke. People weren’t crowding around to see ceramic flora. They were hoping to catch any British celebrities who happened to wander in, or even D list Royal.

Brief brushes with fame followed—a TikTok video went viral. Oprah, in a desperate grab for 21st-century relevance, asked her people to call Chive’s “people.” (At that point “Chive’s People” consisted of an answering machine and a cat named Chairman Meow, whose primary contribution was the ability to knock things off shelves with mathematical precision.)

Then a miracle happened. Devonah, Canada’s second-greatest Instagram philosopher, began a crusade about “presentation” and “the unboxing experience.” Having spent more time double-tapping photos than manipulating clay, she insisted beautiful boxes were essential. We lapped it up like a President being showered with praise. Sales inexplicably improved, proving that humans are indeed shallow creatures who judge blossoms by their cardboard containers.

The project snowballed beyond control. Paris beckoned with Maison&Objet—the final exam, administered by judges wearing black turtlenecks and expressions of professional disdain. Success there felt like winning the Champions League while simultaneously being admitted to Mensa.

But this accolade also demanded something more. So we created this book. It represents thousands of hours, countless sample flowers, and more design combinations than there are ways to mispronounce “bouquet.”

It catalogues everything we’ve planned until Spring 2027. For anyone reading this in 2027, congratulations on surviving whatever apocalypse surely occurred. And, yes, everything is now available.

Enjoy the read.
