Our Ethics

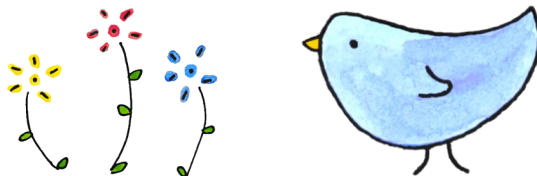

From the very beginning we knew we wanted to make cards that are sustainable and ethical.

We are lucky to have a great number of charity shops local to us who we work with to salvage buttons, beads and wool that might otherwise end up in landfill, turning them into creative cards people love.

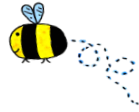

It's not just the materials we use to decorate the cards with either, as the card and envelopes also come from a UK paper mill and are FSC certified.

Our cards are only wrapped by request, and always with biodegradable bags.

Our Story

Jo had always loved crafting beautiful cards for the beautiful people in her life but she had never thought about taking her passion any further. That was until Greg received a diagnosis of Chronic Fatigue Syndrome back in 2018, finding himself housebound and unable to work.

Crafting Jo's designs was something Greg could do flexibly from home, and as his health improved it turned out selling those designs and running the business is what Greg loved to do.

Musker-Sherwood Designs became Greg's entry back into the world of work, doing something he loves whilst doing something good for the planet, too.

Since we set out selling a handful of designs to our local card shop down the road, we have grown our range to over 100 designs, selling to shops nationwide, always using sustainable and reclaimed materials.

Our greetings cards have a remarkable story behind them, and we believe it shows!
