. We started in 2010 in order to create much needed employment in Eswatini, Southern Africa.

What started as a trial in design for social impact and has become a small thriving business with a solid community of local women artisans.

Lead by a designer and in partnership with the local magazine distributors who give us their waste.

We believe in sustainable design, ethical production and craftsmanship.

We focus on developing new and innovative techniques using only waste paper and want to change the perception of recycled materials.

Our women make each product by hand, with basic tools and the sun's rays, using only water based paints, pigments and glues.

Each piece is eco-varnished for durability.

We work with a small community of women artisans who have been with us since the beginning.
