Looking through the lens of contextualised care

Contextualised care describes a holistic welfare-centric approach to veterinary clinical care, recognising that an infinite diversity of situations occur in clinical practice but that each one is unique.

This session will consider the presentation of an everyday clinical problem, situated in several different owner, veterinary and professional contexts.

We will discuss how context is key to making effective clinical decisions. dependent on the challenges that different factors might bring.

How nurse leaders can support the financial growth of their practices

In this session we will exploring some of the benefits that sharing financial information with the nurse leadership team can have on the practice as a whole. Historically nurses haven't always been shared financial information, which is an important part of enabling us to develop business awareness, with a deeper understanding of how we can impact the bigger picture and lead our teams. We will touch on some basic financial terminology and what the numbers can tell us, before focussing on how as nurse leaders we can influence processes, utilise the whole team and develop nursing services that will support the growth of the business.

Change for the Better

Change is as powerful as it is necessary. It can be hard to overcome our innate negativity towards change but we all need to change with the times - to evolve and ideally for the better. As vets we must adapt to the ever changing and higher expectations from our clients to continue providing a top-notch service. In this age of information, the tools are out there to make life easier for you and your clients. The biggest challenge can come from managing the change itself and the potential disruption. So how can you embrace change without skipping a beat in your service?

make it a success once you've had approval.
