Creative achievements do not appear out of the blue. They are the result of hard work. That is why there are such things as patents, for example, so that inventors can benefit from the exploitation of their ideas.

It's just the same with music. It doesn't appear out of thin air. That is why composers, lyricists and music publishers have a statutory right to reasonable remuneration. For your company, this means that the public performance of music (live or recorded) is only allowed with the permission and remuneration of the authors.

That is only fair: you don't work for free either.
