Takeaway Notes

Effective local content policies are crucial for maximizing economic benefits and sustainable development in emerging oil economies.

Solely focusing on oil and gas can be risky and may lead to Dutch disease.

Diversification of the economy is key to mitigating these risks.

Successful local content policies should foster skills and capabilities that benefit the broader economy, driving overall growth and resilience.

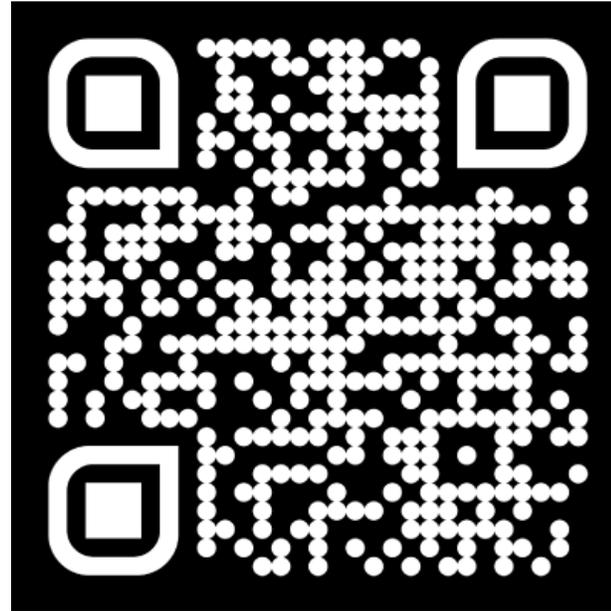

Collaboration between the private sector and policymakers is essential to create a supportive environment for local content development.

A diversified approach leads to greater economic stability and prosperity.
