IN CONVERSATION

Cybercriminal activities have picked up pace in recent months. Cyberspace risks fragmenting into rival jurisdictions too, making it more difficult to counter the attacks. Dr. Henry J. Pearson, UK Cyber Security Ambassador, however, is still confident that the world can build a more resilient cyber space for all. It requires collaboration among nations, just as Singapore and the UK have been partnering to improve today's cyber space within their territories. The path is not at all smooth, but collective security is possible with nations working together in good faith and fulfilling their responsibilities. This includes working to build a safer internet for children, through alliances with the government, industry, and the charity sector. Despite the challenges, there are more reasons to believe in the potential of cyber and technology to help economies. Opportunities and platforms, like GovWare Focus, for sharing, collaborating, and partnerships abound.
