London, GB, 17th March 2025 - Leverint Lighting is thrilled to unveil a first look at their brand new collections for Clerkenwell, London 2025. An interplay of glass, light and fine art, their series of trailblazing designs draw upon inspiration from sculptural configurations, bold architecture and natural sources from the earth itself. Through the use of century-led glassblowing, their lighting offers mood-altering transformations and high-end quality, perfect for all manner of residential and commercial spaces. Co-founder and leading designer Andrew Print at Leverint Lighting shares the intention behind their new pieces; “we’ve created many products over the years that serve their own individual purpose, for these new pieces our main focus was to capture the true essence of glass artistry and manifest it in lighting form. We really delved into the sculptural, shape element of design and pushed the boundaries of light and craftsmanship to show how intricate and beautiful glass-blown lighting can be when executed by specialists. Our incredible glassblowing heritage dates back over a century, so we think it’s imperative to maximise on all the teachings passed down and show the level of authenticity and skill our legacy possesses - and we do this all through light.”

Their bespoke company not only specialises in original one-off designs they also have their own extensive range of crafted pendants, wall lights, cluster and chandeliers, all highly customisable to meet the tastes and imagination of their clientele. Leverint combines design, production and assembly in a state-of-the-art process that takes place across various zones inside their London studio and have recently opened up a second design studio that operates from out of Worcestershire. From experienced glassblowers to innovative designers and technicians, co-founders Andrew, John and Lee forge their lighting alongside a highly skilled team. Fortunate to operate in-house, they’re able to build residential and commercial lighting on a personal level whilst utilising century-old glassblowing technique and sustainable, quality materials. Their comprehensive product range dabbles in contemporary, art-deco and modern lighting styles, all with a heavy focus on the glass artistry itself.

Admittedly, Leverint’s cornerstone lies in their ability to unleash the client’s imagination for bold and sophisticated lighting. An increasingly popular experience, the bespoke service sees the client choose every aspect of their lighting themselves and construct their own reality without limitation, choosing from metalwork, glass profiles right down to the colour of their flexes. Through this service, Leverint’s in-house design team make experienced lighting recommendations, produce 3D visuals and assist with any modifications, prior to production.
