Tatie Lou

For its latest collection of wallpapers, fabrics, cushions and lampshades, blankets and table linens, independent homewares label Tatie Lou has been playing with the cyanotype process – a negative photographic printing technique made using sunlight that was invented by Sir John Herschel in 1842. Titled Soleil, the line's six different designs each revel in the positivity and optimism that inherently comes with the dawning of a new day.

About Tatie Lou

Louise Wagnier founded Tatie Lou in 2019, producing her signature patterned, intricate wallpapers and homewares.

Louise is a printed textile designer and an expert in the Japanese art of Shibori, who, one day, transferred her work to wallpaper. The rest, as they say, is history.

Inspired by the brilliance of Mother Nature, the magic of India, and the beauty of ancient Japanese crafts, Louise creates her designs by combining a mixture of shibori dyeing, hand drawing and painting. Each print is digitised and transformed into a range of different colourways before being applied to wallpapers, fabrics, cushions and lampshades, as well as blankets and table linens.
