Case Study

CCTV control room furniture for Bluegrain Security

Overview of client

Bluegrain Security offer professional security services in and around the Manchester area for residential customers and businesses. Monitoring their clients premises as well as receiving visitors to their control room, the client wanted to create a corporate feel. With their logo as a focus, the pink and grey colour scheme was chosen for the room and technical furniture.

Scope of the project

After visiting the Thinking Space website and getting in touch for a media wall solution, Thinking Space proposed an ergonomic control room console, complete with media wall for their new control room. A design based on a typical CCTV control room set up was provided as a proposal initially to allow the client to appreciate how it would look before finalising their requirements.

Project execution

Thinking Space designed and manufactured a custom security services management console, 4.5 metres in length, with storage units, Moni-Trak and removable access panels for cable management. Choosing materials from the brand new product configurator, a worktop of Poivre was chosen to complement the graphite sunburst printing pattern effect on the panels. The curved end panel has been designed with the client's logo of pink and blue, which teams perfectly with their pink feature wall behind the media wall. This creates a focus in the room, and provides an impressive, clean feel which should "wow" visitors.

"We really are pleased with the quality of service you have provided us from end to end...From sales to design, project management and installation everything has been delivered to quality standard and one your company should be proud of... I would have no hesitation to recommend you to anyone".
